Pause

Dear friends of Addison,

These past few months have been a period of tragedy for many people around the world. For others it's been a time of solitude and reflection. As the virus put the world's economies on pause, we left our office on March 11 and carried on remotely without missing a beat.

During this time our Executive Creative Director created Pause, a photo essay that documents the beauty and incongruities of a moment when life suddenly did just that for a city of millions. We hope you enjoy it.

This book is dedicated, with gratitude, to the heroic efforts and many sacrifices of our healthcare professionals and essential workers, who for months have been saving lives under dangerous conditions. Thank you.

As we reboot and begin to move forward, our city faces a new reality: the need to coexist with a virus that requires us to consider the well-being of others along with our own. That consideration of others' safety also demands that we take action to ensure equality and justice for all New Yorkers.

Here at Addison, we look forward to reconnecting with each of you as the next normal develops, here and throughout the world.
